LET ALL THE PAUPERS STEAL' SAYS SWIFT

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Declaring that intervention in Mexico is the only course open to the United States in order to avoid one day in country or some other nation, Senator Fall of New Mexico today in the Senate tore off the "Mexican hat" and discussed without reservation what he considers the duty of the United States. He detailed sixty-four cases of murder and other outrageous crimes by Mexicans upon Americans, which he personally has investigated.

After discussing the duty which the United States owes to Mexico to its own citizens and to other countries, Senator Fall said:

"We owe the duty to ourselves to avoid the imminent danger of conflict with some other country growing out of the conditions in Mexico and our policy in dealing with that country. We owe a duty to the Mexican people themselves, and we owe a duty to humanity which we cannot neglect."

"With the solemn declaration that we do not war upon the Mexican people or people, that it is not our purpose to acquire territory, to establish laws or overturn their constitution, and to establish an inviolable right to the Mexican people to co-operate with us should they desire to do so, I direct the use of the land and naval forces of this government for the protection of our citizens and other foreigners in Mexico."

Senator Fall took the position that President Wilson's demands upon Mexico were political interference and a proper cause for war, while the intervention demanded by Senator Fall is non-political and would not be in his opinion involve the United States in war.

Poor Whites Fed in Colored Church

The colored people who conduct the St. Martin Church on Green street, where every day this winter homeless and destitute men and women have been welcomed and cared for a record number yesterday. Not only were many negroes cared for, but about fifty white men and women received the food they craved. Three servings a day of hot and wholesome food are the rule at the institution. No one has ever been turned away from the mission.

New Hotel Opposed by Pastor Johnson

After denouncing President Wilson's Mexican policies, and criticizing Mr. Bryan, the Rev. Herbert S. Johnson at the Warren Avenue Baptist Church called for a rising vote of protest against the proposal to open a hotel for colored people at No. 30 Tremont street, South End, and 1800 people rose.

A CHILD DOESN'T LAUGH AND PLAY

If little stomach is sour, liver torpid and bowels clogged.

Give "California Syrup of Figs" at once. A London doctor writes: "I have seen a half-dozen children who were naturally—look! Mother: see the little stomach! Liver torpid, bowels clogged. When constipated, irritable, feverish, nervous, sore, breath and bad stomach—cough, diarrhoea, etc."

Three full cups of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated child moves out of the mother's house. The child is well, playful, child.

Mother can rest easy after giving this harmless "Fruit Laxative," because it never fails to cleanse the bowels, liver, and bowels, and sweetens the stomach and the child's life. Give it at once. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups are printed on each bottle.

The "Figs" is a counterfeited fig syrup. Beware of cheap imitations. The bottle of "California Syrup of Figs" has the name of the manufacturer, J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass., on the label. Don't be fooled.

LET ALL THE PAUPERS STEAL' SAYS SWIFT

Morrison I. Swift started a lively discussion at the Humanist Forum when he pronounced "A New Morality" under which those "desired employment, without resorting to violence, take food wherever and whenever they needed it." The resolution was adopted.

A woman asked: "If we steal from a man as poor as we, what then?" Mr. Swift replied: "We must get all the paupers to steal from the rich."

A man commented: "It is inherent for a lot of us to dole work as much as we can."

Still another asked Mr. Swift if it is not true that "when a man starts stealing, he keeps it up?"

Someone suggested substituting the word "appropriate" for "steal."

The answer that came back to him was: "We have got to vote these hard conditions out of existence—not steal."

One suggested that Rome fall like such a New Morality on Mr. Swift, advocated, and declared if it were possible in a few years all property will be in the hands of thieves.

When asked to take back to him no stealing, but "restoration," according to the speaker, Mr. Swift explained: "This is a revolutionary way of getting at the problem—but it is only temporary."

Then from the rear of the hall came a query: "Mr. Chairman, if they can supply us with food and clothes after we become criminals, why not they before?"

And then they took up a collection.

Spanish Elections Are Still in Doubt

WOMEN WITH DIAMONDS FLEE CHINATOWN FIRE

Boston's Chinatown saw its first fire panic in years early today, when Oxford place was illuminated by flames which swept through the top floor of the six-story building at No. 45 Essex street and caused a loss of $5,000.

The blaze was a spectacular one. Flames shot forty feet through the roof and brought down from all over the down-town section of the city. Chinatown was transformed into a bedlam in a twinkling.

The Chinese quarter seemed doomed at the outset, and the policemen did not stop until certain all of the residents had been rescued.

The girls in the Oxford telephone exchange in Oxford street were also in danger and made preparations to flee if it was necessary. The wind was blowing the fire from the west, and they watched the flames from their windows.

The building was occupied by the Standard Eastern Company and several other firms and the blaze gave the firemen under Chief John Grady a hard fight. The Chinese quarter was saved mainly through the efforts of the crews of Engines 33, 35 and 37.

The fire started in the top floor of the building at No. 45 Essex street and spread to the main building, and caused the main building to be vacated.

Stories about Stagefolk

Wit From "Fanny's First Play"

KNOX-It isn't alone the things that are happening, but the way people are taking them. Why, since Margaret's been in prison she hasn't had time to accept all the invitations she's had from persons who never asked her out before. What's the world coming to?

GILBEY-I never thought we could live without being respectable. But if it's no use, Knox, we might as well go it a bit and look it in the face. Did I ever tell you my father drank?

KNOX-No, but I know it. Simmons told me.

GILBEY-He never could keep his mouth shut. He told me your aunt was a kleptomaniac.

MRS. KNOX-It wasn't true, Mr. Gilbey. She used to pick up handkerchiefs if she saw them lying around; but you might trust her with untold silver.

GILBEY-My Uncle Phil was a teetotaler. My father used to say to me, "Phil, he says, 'don't you ever make a weakness. If you find one getting a hold on you make a merit of it.' He says, 'Your Uncle Phil doesn't like spirits, and he makes a merit of it, and is chairman of the Blue Ribbon Committee. I do like spirits, and I make a merit of it, and I'm King Cockatoos of the Convivial Cockatoos. Never put yourself in the wrong,' he says. 'I used to boast what a good boy Bobby was. Now I swank about what a dog he is!'"

Heard in the Greenroom

By WESLEY HAMER.

Edwina, leading a new touring through the South in the company of Madame Nazimova in "Hells Bells," enjoyed a quick lunch at one of the small railroad station "restaurants" recently. Noting the absence of a waiter with his cup of "coffee," he asked the reason.

"Well, stranger, when we give a luncheon some lovely drinks out of it and our small trade won't stand for it," was the reply.

While Thomas Allen Foster, the "manager," was dancing with a more or less prominent society woman, and more or less unsuccessful dancer, she asked in ecstasy:

"Oh, Mr. Foster, I could dance to heaven with you."

Mr. Foster managed to extricate his feet, and blantly responded:

"Then please reverse."

"There is one thing to be said for the plays of photographic tendencies after they have attracted the attention of the censor," comments Claude Leslie, "they are much shorter than they would be, and that brings to mind the complaint of a diner at a restaurant, who objected that the crabs served him were small, and after the waiter had admitted the quite inattention, added that they were, too, very hard."

"Yesser," the waiter again admitted, "dat's what makes it good dat dey is small."

May Milroy told an interesting story of a well-known theatrical manager. While directing a rehearsal of the company met with a slight accident and gave utterance to an oath. The wife of the manager chanced to be near chatting with her husband. The latter turned upon the culprit.

"Swear before my wife, will you?" he demanded. "I'll teach you to swear before my wife, you blankety blank blank," and so on.

"That will do, dear," the wife responded sweetly. "I think that is enough for one lesson."

How Doth the Little Busy Bee

A bee collector tells us that five dollars' worth of bees kept in a city flat will manufacture a hundred dollars' worth of honey in a year.

It's learning that a herd of bees could be sent forth to look the Thorist's shops, and grocery stores that deal in fancy fruit, I bought a swarm and housed them on my kitchen window sill.

That they might journey out and ply their piracy at will.

"Go, little bees," I said to them. "I care not where you roam. But so you prove industrious, and bring the honey home."

A while they labored joyously—a real delight to see:

"They're tryin' to get rid of me," I heard him sadly mutter; "They're puttin' poisoned needles in their uncle's bread and butter!"

The injured was he looks at us now haunts me in my sleep, And if you want a few of bees I'll give you them cheap!

The Woman in the Hour of Need

The day was then dawning. It was a Friday.

CHAPTER XVIII.

It was on Wednesday morning in a kind of spiritual and physical fever. Every conflicting emotion which a woman can experience in the hour of need was present in her mind and heart. She was alone in the world, and her love seemed to flood body and soul with a new life. She was alone in the world, and her love seemed to flood body and soul with a new life. She was alone in the world, and her love seemed to flood body and soul with a new life.

Catter You Hear in the Hotel of Lies

The Busy Man.

He was one of those depressing people who are always busy. There are a lot of them about, but they don't really get through more work than do other people.

His breakfast was only two minutes late, but, for all that, he rushed out of the house without having any. He was too busy to wait.

Right outside his door he jumped on to a trolley car. A few hundred yards down the road a fire burned out. The conductor assured him that it would be going along in a couple of minutes, but he got out in a tearing rage and hailed a taxi.

He was so busy!

He pulled the taxi up at a shop just outside his office where he could have a cup of coffee, as he had missed his breakfast. His fare was $2, but he was so terribly busy that he did not mind the expense.

As he sat blowing his coffee to cool it—in a frenzied state of excitement a friend came in and sat down by him.

One hour and thirty minutes later he came out, having vanquished that friend in an argument about golf.

Yes, he was a busy man!

Delivered the Goods.

Mr. George Augustus Dale, the famous English writer, shared the opinion of Sir Walter Scott, who said that he did not care what he wrote so long as he could get it out of him.

He had supplied an editor with an article, and the editor asked him whether he would object to a few alterations being made in it.

Mr. Dale wrote in reply:

"I have fulfilled my contract in delivering to you the required number of raw meat. Now you cook it, whether you roast it, or boil it, or fry it, or stew it, I neither care nor want to know."

Rightly Served

Reginald was the recognized wit of the office, and when the new office boy arrived it was expected, as a matter of course, that he would do something really funny. The boy was exceptionally green, and Reginald did not disappoint his admirers.

"Here, boy," he called, "run over to Filds & Filds and get three dozen of those green apples. I want them for my tea."

But the boy knew nothing of Reginald and the "boss" and produced a live pig.

"Here you are," he said. "Pibbe says you can milk the bird yourself. And there ain't no change."

Antidote First

Many fore-hand men have taken warning from the cable story from Calcutta of the death of a scientist who died after being bitten by an Oriental snake. The scientist delayed too long in taking antidotes. Those who believe in corn juice as the old, reliable snake-bite cure, do not refrain from delaying, after they are bitten, but are even willing to be bitten. They are taking the antidote first.

HALL GAINES' GREATEST STORY

It was sending him away from me. Yet never before had I dreamed of leaving him with so much care. I put on the soft white satin gown which was made for me in Calcutta, a string of pearls over my hair, and looked at myself in the mirror. It was a sight to make a man's heart melt.

Martin was waiting for me in the hallway, and to my surprise he had dressed too, but except that he wore a soft silk shirt, I did not know what he was wearing, or whether he looked handsome or not, because it was Martin and that was all that mattered to me.

I saw my footstep was light as I entered the room, for I was alone in white satin slippers, but Martin heard it, and I saw his eyes fluttering and his hand to his mouth, as if something sweet about a silver fly with its little dark head against the sky.

"It's to be a trace, huh? It's to be a trace," I answered, which meant that this was not our last evening together, all painful subjects were to be put aside.

OUT ON BALCONY.

Before we sat down to eat I took me out on the balcony to avoid the rain, for, though there was no rain, it was as if it were raining. I was standing on the balcony, looking out at the water for a moment with a sense of heavenly beauty, when I was startled by the grim and greedy darkness.

During dinner we kept faith with each other. In order to avoid the one subject that was uppermost in both our minds, we played at being children, and pretended it was the day we were at St. Mary's Rock.

Thinking back to that time, and to the incidents which had followed, I thought of her and I so tragic, and I thought of the vocabulary which she called me "boy" and he called me "bagginitis," and at every word that came up from the forest, the cells of our brains were shivered.

When Martin spoke of his skipper I asked, "He's a stunner?" When he mentioned one of his scientific expeditions I asked, "He's any good?" And after he had told me that he hoped to come to possess of some of the crown and raiment of the Black and that "the day of die, we shall do that when we're as old as you."

It was a Friday.

What Fashion Decrees

THE more dress, like the black velvet frock, will always have a following. Here is a model, on the left, that is almost all moire, barring the usual complement of a chiffon bodice and of lace collars and cuffs.

This delightful afternoon frock is developed in fir green moire. The bodice is of white satin, veiled by fir green silk uncin. A ribbon of wood falls edged with malina lace in sheltered across the shoulders and trims the front of the bodice.

The three-quarter sleeve is finished by a deep cushion of this lace.

The giraffe is of wood-colored faille falling just below the waist in back is a butterfly bow.

The skirt is made of three deep fountains of the moire. The upper ones flare in deep circular lines, and the tailored coat is lined with white satin and opened over a waistcoat of white pique de soie with small revers. The stock and tie are of sheer white lawn. The skirt drapes high on the side, and the deep slit shows varnished riding boots.

while the lower is tight and is slit at the left side to show the foot.

From a smart French modiste comes this "Amazilia costume" on the right, which suggests nothing so much as the early morning canter in the park.

It is fashioned of vanilla cloth.

Help Wanted

Begin This Great Story Today by Reading This First

JEROME SCOTT, a dignified-looking business man with offices in a big city skyscraper, advertised for a stenographer to act in the capacity of private secretary. Scott, although posing as an upright man, is in reality unscrupulous. He has several times been in trouble over stenographers to whom he made love, but none in his infancy. Crane, his servile bookkeeper, sends in several applicants. Scott is struck by the physical attractions of Virginia Wilgins and, questioning her closely, she instantly recognizes the caresses of the man and tells him she is not the kind of girl he is seeking. She declares she can see no reason why a girl working in an office should be expected to kiss another woman's husband.

Now Go On with the Story

By WEBSTER DENISON

"But why talk of kissing other women's husbands?" "They suggest it, as it is." "You don't think I would make any such overtures?" "Certainly." "Yes, I think you would—once." "My! You're quite frank!" exclaimed the millionaire. "Frank and interesting. But granting for the moment, the truth of your suspicion, why only once?" "Because after that you would either stop or I would go. And I think you would stop. Some girls have a way of disarming the enemy. I feel that I have." "So you distrust me, yet you have no hesitation in accepting a position in my employ?" "None whatever, Mr. Scott. I am my own protection, and I might be a protection for you, too." The importer raised a hand in dissent. "Thank you, I need none," he said with some show of solemnity. "You misjudge me. In a measure you are perhaps right, but I am afraid you are inclined to exaggerate the attitude of men in the business world, as so many young women unfortunately do. I have no doubt, of course, that there are many men who would make advances to so attractive a young woman."

"Being pretty and particular, I suppose, is a trying combination." "It just keeps me trying. However, I'm waiting your precious time. What is the verdict?" "My dear young lady, the importer answered with mock sincerity, "I should be extremely happy to have you in my employ, but in justice to the other applicants I think I should see them."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

FORGET HIM
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of twenty and in love with a young man of twenty. He does not call on me, but I would like to have him call on me every day and when we meet he is very kind to me. What would you advise me to do?

ALBERTA.
FORGET HIM! That does not appear very sympathetic, but it is not proper for her to be so much in love. A girl of sixteen is too young to be thinking for a man who has given no evidence that he cares for her. Let that wait for more experienced years.

SHE SHOULD BUY IT
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
It is proper for a young girl to buy her wedding dress, or should the young man make her a present of it?

A. W.
THE girl should buy her own clothes, of course. It would be very improper for her to be so much in love with a man who has given no evidence that he cares for her. Let that wait for more experienced years.
